SEWARD being a foreigner, was treated grammes. as all foreigners are now trented in China, and must not complain. He would prubably have fared no better had he been President of the United States, and no worse had be been the humblest private citizen. He came saw, and was stoned—us is almost every for reigner who ventures any distance from a treaty port at the present day. The TAUOTAL of course, sent in an apology, and, upon this. a great deal of stress was laid; but it pointed out by a correspondent of the N. Daily News, who evidently knows well what he is writing about. Cat the anology merely the emptiest formality, and gives no ground to suppose that those concerned in the outrage will be punished. It is certainly becoming an interesting question whether a stop can be put to these playful ebulitions of popular feeling. It is of course casy to represent each occurrence as unexpected, but it is unfortunate that these accidents are the fact that in former years foreigners were they were the exception, not the rule. If he go to any place away from the treaty ports, there is every probability that he will be stoned; but provided he is a good hand at dodging, and no escapes being knocked down, and has the commendable prudence to make himself scarce as quickly as he can, nothing worthy of official notice takes place. He gets into his boat as the last stone splashes in the water, and there the matter ends. It is, however, open to question whether relations of so primitive a nature are all we have right to claim under existing treaties.

Carone, it is necessary to hear in mind three points of distinction. In China there was first the long duration of a central authority devoid of victor. For pearly five bundred years state had been fighting with state, clan with clan, family with family. Secondly, poliguny, woexercised no restmint over quarrels, intrigues, and murders. Thirdly, there, was an absence of a sound religious belief. The Chinese did not trouble themselves about herosies; but their thoughts and actions were all confined to time, and they were in no way impregented with heavenly aspirations. According to Mencius, Confucius appeared at this crisis in the nation's history. He was .... born B. C. 550, or 551. Kung was his clan unme, and it was perhaps not necessary to s'ate that Confucius was only a lutinised form of Kung-Fu-Taze, Kung, the philosopher or mas-ter. His father had been distinguished for his during, and one incident in his life was suggestive of the tales of fendal Enrope. The peothe enemy on being summoned drew up the ather, lienring the sound, rushed up, and by the culfia its Samson did the gates of Gaza. Confucius turned his mind to learning at the age of 15; at 19 according to the practice of Ohina and a very good one, too-be murtenoher. 'On the death of his mother, be showed the groutcet grief. When the twenty-seven months of legal mourning were over, and it is related be was very fond, he burst into tears. In the year 510 he visited the capital of the kingdom, and had several interviews with Laon-teze. It is romarkable that while Laontere thought little of Confucius, Confucius was profoundly impressed with Lifeu-teze. He then returned to Lo. where he spent his life in privacy among his disciples. At the age of 52 be was made chief magistrate, and effected great reforms in the departments, over which he had control. He laboured here to restore the Marquis of Lo to his proper authority, but this personage neglected the advice of Confucius, and giving himself up to pleasure, compelled Confucina to leave. This, the sage did very unwillingly. All men of influence fell off rom him. Ho bad attempted reforms, some of which were exaggerated, and he had failed. The lecturar here proceeded to notice the object which Confucius had in view. One of his disciples asked him what was the first thing in numes was the whole secret of a good political system. There would be good Government, when the father ordered, and when the son obeyed. In fact, his doctrine was that men should call a spade a spade—that people shoul t be made in reality, what their names or titles indicated as their relation to Society. Human Society he held to the unade up of five relations, I namely, those by tween Sovereign and Minister. accepted this account, and with regard to the relations of husband and wife he was not in any way superior to the other sages who had cunneinted their views of propriety on the subciple which the lecturer had heard forcibly

They had to do with the world and should strive to restore good order to it, not to withdraw from it. There, suid Dr. Legge, spoke a brave beart and a tras sympathy. A year after Confucios' rotum to his native city, his son died, but he bore the loss with equanimity. Indeed, except on the occasion of his mother's death, the Sage appeared never to have shown any great domestic affection. When his wife died, he even reproved his son for his excessive grief and mon raing for his mother. But when a year afterwards. his favourite disciple; died, the case was very different.
